

Bond's night to remember

IT WAS a night to remember the many triumphs — and the just as familiar trials — of Australia's first private university.

On Saturday, Bond University alumni, partners and guests gathered in their hundreds at Royal Pines Resort for a function to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the Robina institution.

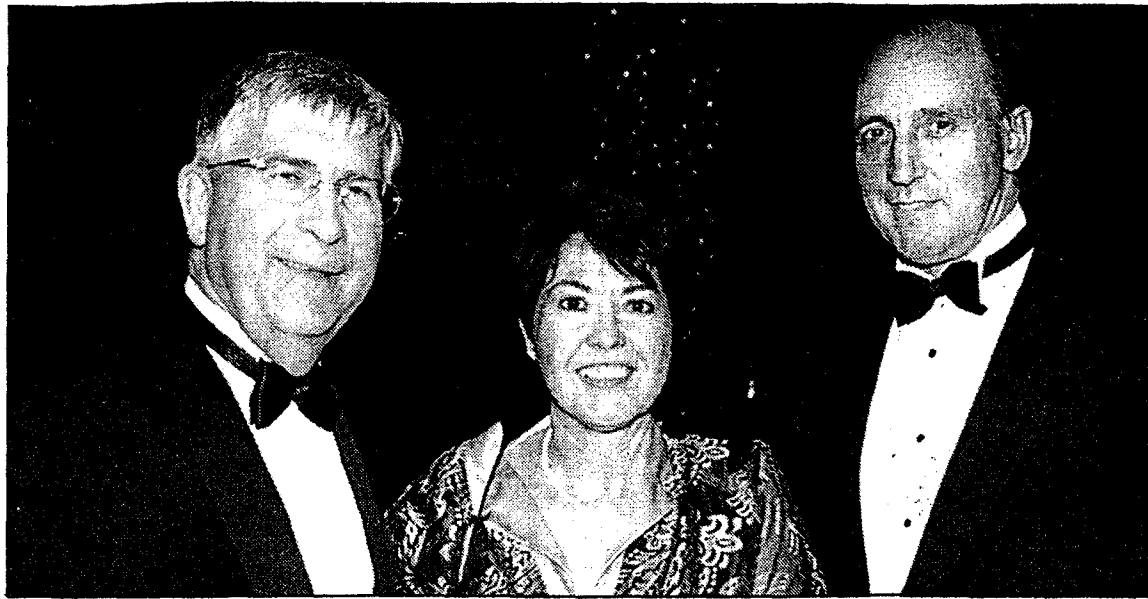

There have been times during that decade when the university's future appeared to be in doubt, but vice-chancellor Professor Ken Moores says Bond now is blooming. Nevertheless, it probably was appropriate that Saturday night's celebration was deemed an occasion for a lecture — this time delivered by guest speaker and former Prime Minister Paul Keating.

Addressing issues such as multiculturalism, Australia becoming a republic and the importance of international education, Mr Keating was in fine and typically outspoken form.

In a wide-ranging speech, Mr Keating congratulated Bond for its achievements during the past decade.

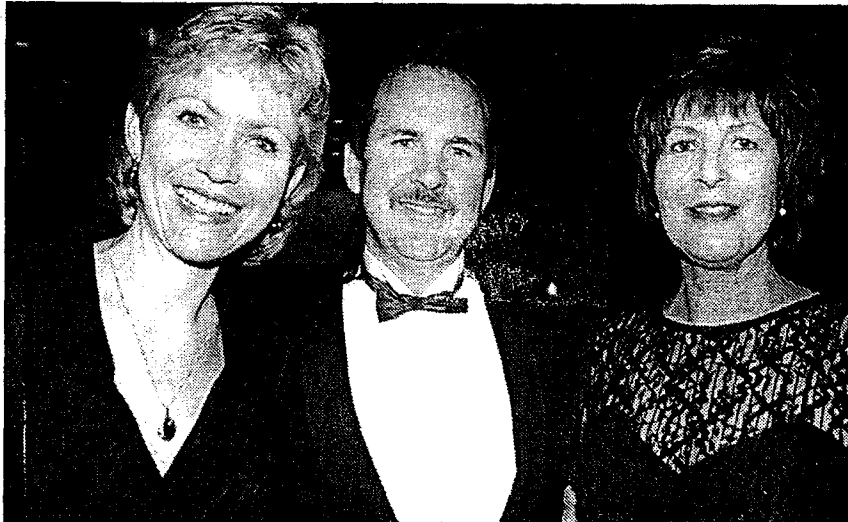

Bond University welcomed its first intake of students in May, 1989.

Vice-chancellor Professor Ken Moores, his wife Tricia, and guest speaker and former Prime Minister Paul Keating at Bond University's 10th anniversary dinner

Dean of the School of Business, Professor Ray Byron, and wife Carole

Law lecturers, from left, Bobette Wolski, Michael Weir and Margaret Donaldson attended the 10th anniversary function

Bond University graduates John Merity (1993) and Rani Chopra (1995)

16

(121)

